Summary

Microsoft reported solid overall numbers (15% total c/c revs growth, 21% non-GAAP EPS growth), with the stock's fade in the after-market likely a function of the lack of upside in both Azure (+38%, a shade below the 39% growth bogey) and the big M365 apps segment (+14%, in-line with the guide but below our 15% estimate). Microsoft allocated scarce GPU capacity away from Azure to 1P products, but the fact that BOTH Azure and the M365 segments fell a bit short is the key negative we're hearing that is driving the modest after-market fade. That said, we conclude that the capacity outlook and pending backlog conversion look so compelling that we remain Buy-rated.

Still Bullish on Azure Given Capacity Adds

While 38% Azure growth landed a point short, there are plenty of Azure positives from this print, namely a) a 1-point beat to 39% Azure growth for 3Q/Mar implies record sequential dollar adds, b) Microsoft added a full 1 GW of compute capacity in 2Q/Dec alone, even before the two massive Fairwater campuses ramp, and the spike in the GPU/equipment mix of capex points to material capacity available in the coming quarters, c) the $625 billion backlog (55% not OpenAI) speaks to material demand and d) the new average contract duration of just 2.5 years in the backlog even with the addition of the OpenAI/Anthropic deals, up only modestly from 2 years in the last quarter, is a quiet but important reveal that the OpenAI mega-deal converts to Azure revs faster than expected, and as such we're raising our FY28 Azure revs growth estimate from 31% to 34% after just raising our Azure estimates last week.

The 1P Bet on Copilot and an Indie Model

Microsoft has elected to increase the allocation of new GPU compute to its 1P efforts, effectively throttling Azure growth, because of its confidence in monetizing Copilot (saying that usage is ramping) and its own AI models. The challenge for the stock is that many investors don't buy into that trade-off, as M365 revs growth is not accelerating due to Copilot, many checks on Copilot don't suggest a strong usage ramp (we plan to refresh our own checks in case we've missed a usage ramp) and the model market appears crowded and capital-intensive. We think Microsoft needs to "prove" that these are good investments.

Valuation:

At CY26E multiples of 53x FCF, 25x GAAP EPS and 23x non-GAAP EPS, we still view the stock as being reasonably-priced given the potential for an Azure acceleration and an improvement in the investor view of Microsoft's OpenAI exposure. Our unchanged PT of $600 is based on an assumed CY27 non-GAAP P/E multiple of 27x, a deserved premium.

Our View of the Numbers

Azure Growth – 38%/38% for Dec/Mar

After surprising the Street with an extraordinary 8-point acceleration in c/c Azure growth in the 3Q/Mar and 4Q/Jun 2025 quarters, Microsoft posted its second consecutive quarter with relatively stable Azure growth, this time at 38%, a point above the guide and a point below the Street bogey for a 2-point beat to 39%. The 38% growth rate in 2Q/Dec equates to an estimated sequential dollar growth of $1.6 billion, up smartly from $1.2 billion in the year-ago quarter but down from each of the last two quarters. If we assume a 1-point beat on the guide for 37-38% Azure growth in 3Q/Mar, so 39% actual, this would be in-line with our estimate and implies a material step-up in sequential dollar growth to $2.3 billion, matching the all-time high reported in the 4Q/Jun 2025 quarter. So net, while the 2Q/Dec actual was a bit soft, the 3Q/Mar guide is actually quite solid and for reasons we discuss below, perhaps somewhat conservative.

Azure Growth Variables – Capacity, 1P vs 3P and Other Factors

On the variables impacting Azure growth, we heard:

- GPU Capacity Adds: Microsoft continues to describe its Azure outlook for 2Q/Dec as being a "supply guide", reflecting limitations in the amount of AI infra capacity they were able to bring up. This is despite Microsoft adding a full 1 GW of capacity in 2Q/Dec alone. To put that in context, Microsoft added 2 GW of new capacity in FY25, implying a material capacity unlock. While Microsoft has a massive global capacity footprint, this figure implies to us that the big Fairwater Atlanta campus ramped at a faster-than-expected clip. The fact that this didn't translate to Azure upside in 2Q/Dec implies that a) much of that capacity ramped late in the quarter and instead would lift 3Q/Mar, b) Microsoft allocated a large and growing portion of this capacity to serve 1P apps usage (see below) and/or c) Microsoft is indeed adding a ton of "warm shells" or raw capacity but that it did so in the year-ago quarter as well, such that the compare is difficult, limiting the ability of huge amounts of new capacity to accelerate Azure growth. Given the stronger-than-expected capex figure of $37.5 billion coupled with a spike in the mix from GPUs/servers (2/3rds), we conclude that Microsoft is likely planning for material GPU capacity additions in 3Q/Mar and 4Q/Jun. This supports a constructive view of Azure growth in the coming quarters.
- 1P vs 3P Allocation: Microsoft was clear that it deliberately allocated more incremental GPU capacity to its 1P AI applications, namely M365 Copilot (reported in the PBP segment, not in Azure). The company was clear that it is prioritizing having Copilot inference capacity in place, THEN it will allocate capacity to train its 1P models (which lands in R&D expenses) and THEN serve external/3P customers. Microsoft said that without this 1P allocation, Azure growth would have been above 40% (if 41%, then the 1P allocation trimmed 3-points of growth off Azure). While ostensibly this signals strong Copilot usage, the challenge for investors is that the M365 segment "merely" landed in-line at 14% growth and Microsoft's first-ever Copilot seat disclosure of 15m (3% penetration on the 450m M365 base) was about in-line (lower than our 18m estimate but above some buy-side estimates). We can imagine that some investors will interpret the 1P allocation as being defensive in light of new efforts from OpenAI and Anthropic to encroach on Microsoft's Office turf.
- Core Enterprise Demand: Microsoft didn't comment on the mix between AI and core CPU growth, apart from flagging (as it has in the past) demand for data software and Fabric in particular, now $2 billion in revs and growing by 60% (a growth rate in-line with that of Databricks). We don't read that as negative for Snowflake, as we really don't hear anecdotes of Snowflake-to-Fabric transitions. Rather, it may be a generally good read on the strength of the overall data investment cycle. Our 4Q25 Cloud Infra checks (see link to report here) signaled generally healthy enterprise demand.

The $625 Billion Backlog

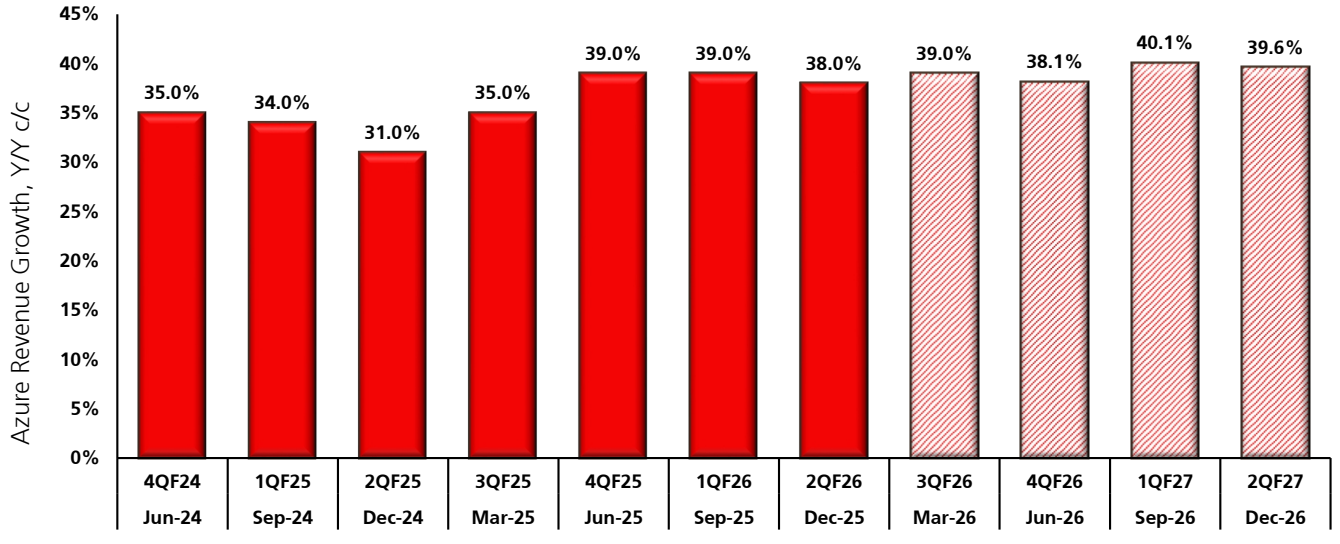

Given the disclosures of the $250 billion OpenAI deal and the $30 billion Anthropic deal, investors were expecting a very strong backlog figure. We were already at $649 billion and Microsoft posted $625 billion, further disclosing that 55% of that backlog comes from customers other than OpenAI (to make the diversification point). There are two interesting things on this topic:

- Haircutting the OpenAI deal: Microsoft said that 45% of the $625 billion backlog or $281 billion was related to OpenAI, but that it added LESS than the full amount of the recent $250 billion to this figure. That's because Microsoft haircuts the $250 billion OpenAI deal and adds an amount "net of reserves" to its backlog. We don't know the size of the haircut but the message here is that Microsoft appears to be adding a layer of conservatism (assuming that not all the commitment actually translates to Azure revs).
- Fast Conversion of OpenAI: By layering-in something a bit less than $250 billion from OpenAI and something a bit less than $30 billion from Anthropic into the RPO figure, we would have expected the weighted average duration of the backlog to expand well beyond the 2 years from the 1Q/Sept backlog. In fact, it expanded only modestly to "2.5 years" (rounding, so slightly higher). The math on the implied duration of the OpenAI deal suggests that this deal will convert to Microsoft revs at a faster-than-expected clip, offering material Azure upside potential in FY27-FY28 if/as Microsoft stands up sufficient GPU capacity. This may have been one of the strongest but overlooked data points from the print.

Bottom Line – 3Q/39% Azure Growth Looks Doable

Near-term, reflecting on all the above, we're most encouraged by the evidence of very strong demand as well as the pace of AI capacity go-lives, balanced by the recognition that Microsoft is deliberately throttling Azure growth to serve 1P needs. Bottom line, our recently-raised Azure growth estimates still feel about right for FY26 and FY27 and hence we're merely tweaking our estimates to what we show below. But to the point we made above about the OpenAI deal converting faster than we expected, we now feel as if our FY28 Azure growth estimate of 31% is too low – potentially far too low – and we're raising it to 34%.

Other Revenue Drivers

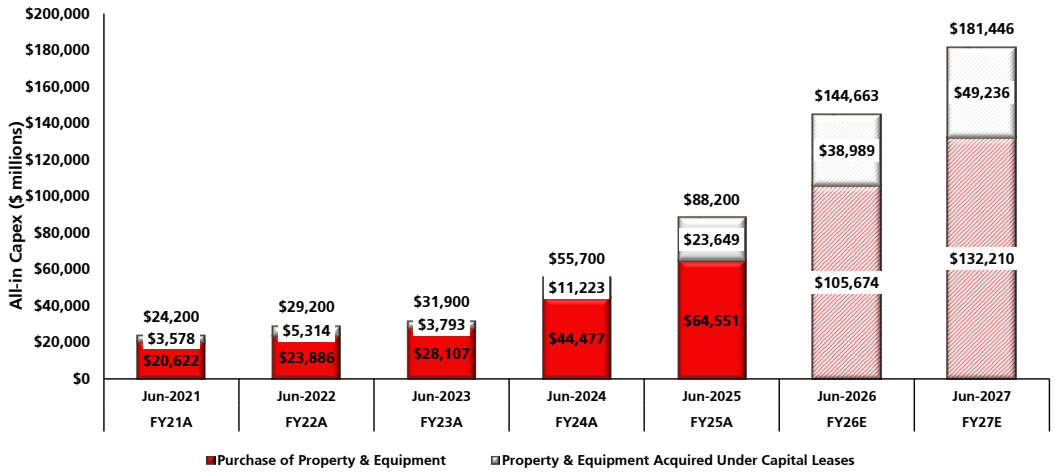

Microsoft posted 2Q/Dec total revs of $81.3 billion, +15% in c/c and in-line with the range of 12-17% c/c growth in each of the previous 9 quarters, impressive at Microsoft's scale. That said, this fell a bit short of our $81.7 billion estimate and represented upside to the high end of the guide that was lower than what we've seen in the last three quarters. Looking forward, Microsoft guided to 3Q/Mar c/c total revs of a stable $81.75b at the high end, which with a slightly lighter than normal beat is about in-line with our $82.2 billion estimate. We'd flag a few notable segments:

- M365 Commercial Cloud: This large (~$85 billion run-rate) segment posted growth of 14%, in-line with the high end of the guide but below our 15% estimate and a slight downtick from consistent 15-16% growth in each of the previous 6 quarters. Microsoft guided to a stable growth of 14% in this segment in 3Q/Mar. Seat growth was stable at 6% (no sign of headcount pressure) such that the ARPU upside must have moderated slightly in the quarter, perhaps as the E5 SKU upgrade process matures. As noted above, the challenge for investors is that to justify the allocation of scarce GPU capacity to 1P services such as Copilot, investors need to see that Copilot momentum is indeed ramping to the point that it is bending the M365 Cloud segment higher. Why not? We can imagine that this could be due to a) other growth drivers such as the E5 uplift moderating due to maturity and/or b) Copilot usage ramping but under the seat-based model, this doesn't cleanly translate to M365 revs uplift.
- Consumer Softness in 3Q/Mar: When setting the 3Q/Mar guide, Microsoft mentioned enterprise strength offset by some consumer segments. We probed, and Microsoft was referring to some pressures in Windows OEM growth (hardware inflation impacting demand), in Bing/search and in Gaming (the Call of Duty: Black Ops game having a mixed start).

Capex - GPU Purchases Ramp

Relative to our estimate of all-in capex of $36.6 billion, 2Q/Dec capex landed higher at $37.5 billion. Of more importance to Nvidia/hardware investors is that the mix of capex associated with GPUs/equipment spiked to 2/3rds from ~50% in prior quarters and is expected to remain at this elevated mix in 3Q/Mar. This is not related to hardware (DRAM/memory) inflation, as this takes time to impact Microsoft. Rather, it's a function of material capacity or "warm shell" additions that now need to be stood up with GPU racks. This is consistent with the "1 GW" of capacity added comment for 2Q/Dec and consistent with our recent report on the Fairwater campus ramps. Capex is expected to be sequentially down in 3Q/Mar (timing issues) such that our full year FY26 all-in capex estimate remains about the same at $145 billion.

The Margin Story Remains Strong

In 2Q/Dec, total company operating margins landed at 47.1%, well above the 45.3% guide, above our 46.3% estimate and +160bps y/y. Given the pressure on Azure GMs as Microsoft scales its AI infra (total Cloud GMs of 67% were -300bps y/y), this is a very strong margin performance. Opex growth was just 4% (even lower excluding an undisclosed Gaming impairment charge) in part due to very tight headcount control and some high-GM segments (Windows OEM, Server Products) outperforming. GMs of 68.0% were also above our 67.4% estimate and down just 70bps y/y despite the pressure from the material AI infra investment cycle. For 3Q/Mar, Microsoft guided to operating margins of 45.1%, down just slightly y/y, and raised its FY26 EBIT margins guidance from "flat" to "up slightly". We were already modeling FY26 margins to be +100bps and hence this guidance raise isn't impacting our model much.

- Undermining Capex ROI Concerns: There are several non-GPU factors impacting GMs, but even after absorbing a material ramp in lower-GM Azure GPU cloud infrastructure revs, overall company GMs were only down 70bps y/y. While GMs are likely to be down more in the coming quarters assuming Microsoft doesn't have the "air cover" from a ramp in high-GM segments like Windows OEM, the bottom line here is that the layering-in of presumably low-GM GPU cloud business has not pressured Microsoft's GM structure nearly as much as was feared 1-2 years ago. Investor AI capex ROI concerns will surely linger, but every time Microsoft posts such strong margins in the face of huge GPU investments, it helps to chip away at the thesis that being an "AI token factory" is simply a bad business.
- Thoughts on Copilot GMs: As noted, Microsoft said that Azure growth would have been above 40% if not for their decision to allocate scarce GPUs capacity to 1P apps (Copilot) and model training. If Azure growth would have been 41% without this 1P allocation, that implies ~$2 billion of annualized compute. Let's say that $0.5 billion of that went to 1P model training, leaving $1.5 billion annualized for Copilot compute. On a roughly $3 billion annualized Copilot revs base, that implies sub-50% Copilot GMs.

Shift in OpenAI Accounting

One surprise was Microsoft's disclosure that it has changed the way it accounts for its exposure to OpenAI's balance sheet and GAAP losses. Rather than running its (27%) share of OpenAI GAAP losses through Microsoft's Other Income line, Microsoft will now report in Other Income its share of the change in OpenAI's net assets. If, for instance, OpenAI were to complete a large funding round that bolstered its cash balance and hence net assets, Microsoft would – as it did in 2Q/Dec – report a large gain. If OpenAI did not raise funds and burned through cash, thereby lowering net assets, Microsoft would report a loss. While the downside risk to Microsoft's GAAP EPS from reporting a share of OpenAI losses was becoming a non-issue as investors pivoted to non-GAAP, the much lower probability of GAAP EPS pressure from OpenAI is bottom line a good thing for the stock, removing a source of EPS variability.

Valuation and Stock Sentiment

At the after-market price, Microsoft shares trade at CY26E multiples of 53x FCF, 25x GAAP EPS and 23x non-GAAP EPS. The FCF multiple represents a material premium to the broader peer group, in large part because of the heavy capex investment phase. In our view, Microsoft shares deserve an EPS and FCF multiple premium based on the emerging AI opportunity and the company's strong execution. On a non-GAAP P/E basis, the stock, in our view, still trades at a reasonable multiple relative to peers such as Oracle and SAP. If Azure can sustain high-30% growth and margins remain stable or up, then the valuation multiples appear compelling and we remain BUY-rated. Our unchanged PT of $600 is based on an assumed CY27 non-GAAP P/E multiple of 27x, a deserved premium to the peer group.

Company Description

Founded in 1975, Microsoft is the world's largest software company, generating over $200bn in annual revenue in fiscal 2023. Operating in over 190 countries, the company is a market leader across numerous software categories, with core solutions including cloud computing infrastructure (Azure), productivity applications (Office and Office 365), operating systems (Windows), business applications (Dynamics), internet services (LinkedIn, Bing), database software (SQL Server), gaming (Xbox), devices (Surface), and other products and services addressing enterprise and consumer technology markets.

Valuation Method and Risk Statement

We value Microsoft on a relative EV/FCF multiple on CY27 estimates. Key risks for Microsoft include the IT spending environment, the pace of decline in legacy businesses relative to growth in newer Cloud-centric businesses, the required capex investment needed to build Cloud datacenters, competitive pressure from Cloud-native leaders like Amazon and Google, and legal and regulatory risk given Microsoft's dominant position in PC operating systems and productivity applications. Microsoft operates in the technology industry which also sees rapid change and innovation, and the company's market opportunity could change rapidly if technology and demand preferences shift in an unanticipated direction.

UBS acts or may act as principal in the debt securities (or in related derivatives) that may be the subject of this report. This recommendation was finalized on: 29 January 2026 08:33 AM GMT. UBS has designated certain UBS Global Research department members as Derivatives Research Analysts where those department members publish research principally on the analysis of the price or market for a derivative, and provide information reasonably sufficient upon which to base a decision to enter into a derivatives transaction. Where Derivatives Research Analysts co-author research reports with Equity Research Analysts or Economists, the Derivatives Research Analyst is responsible for the derivatives investment views, forecasts, and/or recommendations. Quantitative Research Review: UBS Global Research publishes a quantitative assessment of its analysts' responses to certain questions about the likelihood of an occurrence of a number of short term factors in a product known as the 'Quantitative Research Review'. Views contained in this assessment on a particular stock reflect only the views on those short term factors which are a different timeframe to the 12-month timeframe reflected in any equity rating set out in this note. For the latest responses, please see the Quantitative Research Review Addendum at the back of this report, where applicable. For previous responses please make reference to (i) previous UBS Global Research reports; and (ii) where no applicable research report was published that month, the Quantitative Research Review which can be found at https://neo.ubs.com/quantitative, or contact your UBS sales representative for access to the report or the Quantitative Research Team on ubs-quant-answers@ubs.com. A consolidated report which contains all responses is also available and again you should contact your UBS sales representative for details and pricing or the Quantitative Research team on the email above.

Investing in structured investments involves significant risks. For a detailed discussion of the risks involved in investing in any particular structured investment, you must read the relevant offering materials for that investment. Structured investments are unsecured obligations of a particular issuer with returns linked to the performance of an underlying asset. Depending on the terms of the investment, investors could lose all or a substantial portion of their investment based on the performance of the underlying asset. Investors could also lose their entire investment if the issuer becomes insolvent. UBS does not guarantee in any way the obligations or the financial condition of any issuer or the accuracy of any financial information provided by any issuer. Structured investments are not traditional investments and investing in a structured investment is not equivalent to investing directly in the underlying asset. Structured investments may have limited or no liquidity, and investors should be prepared to hold their investment to maturity. The return of structured investments may be limited by a maximum gain, participation rate or other feature. Structured investments may include call features and, if a structured investment is called early, investors would not earn any further return and may not be able to reinvest in similar investments with similar terms. Structured investments include costs and fees which are generally embedded in the price of the investment. The tax treatment of a structured investment may be complex and may differ from a direct investment in the underlying asset. UBS and its employees do not provide tax advice. Investors should consult their own tax advisor about their own tax situation before investing in any securities.

Important Information About Sustainable Investing Strategies: Sustainable investing strategies aim to consider and incorporate environmental, social and governance (ESG) factors into investment process and portfolio construction. Strategies across geographies approach ESG analysis and incorporate the findings in a variety of ways. Incorporating ESG factors or Sustainable Investing considerations may inhibit the portfolio manager's ability to participate in certain investment opportunities that otherwise would be consistent with its investment objective and other principal investment strategies. The returns on a portfolio incorporating ESG factors or Sustainable Investing considerations may be lower or higher than portfolios where ESG factors, exclusions, or other sustainability issues are not considered by the portfolio manager, and the investment opportunities available to such portfolios may differ.
