Summary

Results and guidance again met pre-call investor bogeys and the substantial increase in capital return - particularly the dividend - should also please a wide swath of investors based on our recent conversations. In addition to being in the crosshairs of any AI naysayers, the debate here revolves around market share/competitive position and the sustainability of margins. On the former, NVDA is proving that it can be very nimble - not only plugging holes with "customized" merchant solutions, but also building entirely new systems (e.g. Vera CPU) for an evolving agentic world that could swing some investor excitement back in NVDA's direction. On the margin debate, HBM costs are rising substantially next year (see below) but the company sounds confident in its ability to sustain these margin levels. The stock has historically been surprisingly well correlated with Y/Y growth (see Figure 1) and this looks to be peaking in FQ2, so this could start to again be a net headwind. Even so, there now seems to be a clear path to >$15 in C2027 EPS and potentially pushing the $20 level in C2028 so taking it all into account, we continue to see the most likely path as a steady grind higher that compounds EPS growth, but at a low multiple. Net, we walk C2027E/2028E EPS up a bit more from $14.35/$17.07 to $15.37/$18.24 and our PT walks higher from $275 to $280 and we maintain Buy.

Analysis/Key Highlights

- NVDA reported FQ1 revenue of ~$81.6B, above both UBSe and Street and nicely ahead of its usual ~$2B/Q beat. The beat came from data center and this was entirely driven by the networking segment as compute was actually a little below UBSe/Street.
- FQ2 Revenue was guided to $91B at the midpoint - a touch above UBSe (well above Street) but very much in line with pre-call investor bogeys we were hearing in the ~$90-91B range. Gross margin was also guided to remain in the 75% range which NVDA expects to be able to maintain through F2027/C2026 even as Rubin ramps starting in CQ3. NVDA provided little insight into which segment would grow the most, but it did increase full year opex to grow high-40%s (pro forma for the inclusion of SBC) versus low-40%s prior. Gross margin remains a point of contention for F2028/C2027 as NVDA seems to be covered this year by supply agreements, but we are modeling HBM4E (which will start to represent the majority of NVDA's HBM consumption by C2H:27) to carry prices that are ~90% higher than HBM3E - currently the majority of NVDA's HBM use. NVDA has only said it aims to maintain these mid-70% levels next year but sounded quite confident in our callback.
- NVDA added new revenue segment disclosures, essentially lumping together gaming, ProVis, autos, and OEM & IP into a new edge computing segment. Within data center, it is providing additional customer disclosure essentially bucketing these into hyperscalers (e.g. public cloud and large consumer internet players (e.g. MSFT, Google, AMZN, META) and a grouping called ACIE (AI cloud (e.g. neoclouds), industrial, enterprise). The interesting thing here is that the hyperscale bucket is outgrowing capex growth from these same companies (see Figure 4) consistently over the past 4Qs and NVDA outgrew capex in C2025 as well. It is more challenging to compare NVDA's other customer bucket to the capex pool for these companies.

- Maybe the most controversial item was new disclosure that "standalone" Vera CPU will be ~$20B in revenue this year and opens up a new $200B TAM. On the surface, this is a much larger number this year than we would have expected and is even bigger than AMD which we model to be ~$16B this year and has >50% share in the cloud segment. In speaking with the company, there are some clear use cases that are standalone chips (e.g. CPUs attached to non-NVDA accelerators (for example META as part of its recently signed Vera CPU deal)) but this also includes "standalone" systems that only have a CPU with no GPU. It is hard to say, but in these configurations, the standalone CPU chip might, we think, be ~30% of the total value with DRAM being another large component. So NVDA may only be doing ~$5-7B of CPU chip revenue this year - which would imply ~1-1.5MM units - which makes sense to us. Regardless, NVDA's forward thinking on supply should especially come to bear in this agentic world where newcomers like ARM and even QCOM are competing for capacity and we read this as negative for the aspirations of these other competitors.
- NVDA had a more forceful message that it is gaining share of AI compute for key frontier model builders. These customers like Anthropic in particular are becoming more reliant on NVDA platforms in the cloud at both hyperscalers and neoclouds. Over time, the next step would be that Anthropic and OAI would stand up their own infrastructure to alleviate having to pay margin to both clouds and NVDA but would still use NVDA infrastructure. Over the longer term, they will move to using more ASICs but as we have said many times, this will take time.
- We previewed capital return as a major fulcrum point for this call and NVDA delivered with an incremental $80B share repo (on top of the existing $39B remaining on its current authorization). This is a little less than the total ~$150B share repo we thought possible, but NVDA also delivered on the dividend with an increase from the nominal $0.01/share to now a full $0.25/share (or ~$6B/Q). The company reiterated its commitment to return >50% of FCF this year, which we now model to be ~$210B meaning that it would have to repo ~$69B in total from FQ2-FQ4 on top of the ~$18B in dividend over this same period. We expect repo to be even slightly higher than this.
- One of the most important indicators we watch is NVDA's supply, which we define as the sum of 1) balance sheet inventory, and 2) gross inventory purchase commitments + long-term supply obligations. NVDA excludes cloud-related commitments from total reported purchase commitments, giving a cleaner inventory-related supply number. After supply grew $25B Q/Q in FQ3 and $47B Q/Q in FQ4 2026, the FQ1 figure grew less in absolute dollars but still another $28B Q/Q to ~$145B, or +24% Q/Q. We believe we pioneered the use of this number as a meaningful metric and NVDA management spoke for the first time on this call about this number and the $145B figure is an accurate measure of supply. The disclosure this Q around the duration of coverage for these dollars changed somewhat, however, with the portion of purchase commits covering F2027 essentially unchanged versus last Q at ~$95B and all of the growth from ~$95B of purchase commits last Q to ~$119B of commits this Q (e.g. growth of ~$25B) related to periods from F2028-F2031. When queried, the company said that this is evidence of how forward-thinking it is on supply - it has all of its supply locked up for this year since the number did not move and all future commitments are for the out-years.
- The point of this number is that it indicates how much revenue "headroom" the company has in an environment still determined by supply. This is equal to ~159% of FQ2 revenue (at midpoint) but more like ~133% when we make this apples to apples w/ the prior Q. This is still much higher than the historical ~90% level (which makes sense as NVDA is now supplying full systems). It is tough to say how much this has extended the average duration of these supply dollars, but if we make some adjustments for this, it seems fair to say that if the "new normal" may be something more like 120-130% in the era of being a full platform rack scale supplier. Adjusting for this would imply that NVDA has revenue headroom of ~ $110-120B/Q based on this level of supply so we see no impediments to the company being able to hit our far above Street numbers through C2H:26. This is shown in Figure 2 and Figure 3.

- Networking revenues grew 35% Q/Q and 199% Y/Y, coming in ahead of our expectations as the NVLink scale-up solution continues to ramp. In addition to scale up, NVDA highlighted strength in the Spectrum X ethernet platform which is now bigger than all other ethernet platforms combined. We continue to see networking growing slightly ahead of Compute in the near term.
- Customer concentration increased Y/Y in FQ1, with the top three direct customers representing 54% of the total revenue (~$44.1B; 21% attributed to a first customer, 17% to a second, and 16% to a third) compared to FQ1 2026, when the top two direct customers accounted for 30% of revenue.
- Opex was up ~$800MM Q/Q in FQ1 to $7.5B and was guided up to $8.3B ($200MM higher than UBSe). On a Non-GAAP basis, the company expects stable OM, with revenue and non-GAAP opex both guided up ~11% Q/Q at the midpoint. Cloud service commitments were up $3B Q/Q to $30B, accelerating from a smaller $1B increase in FQ4.

Read Across

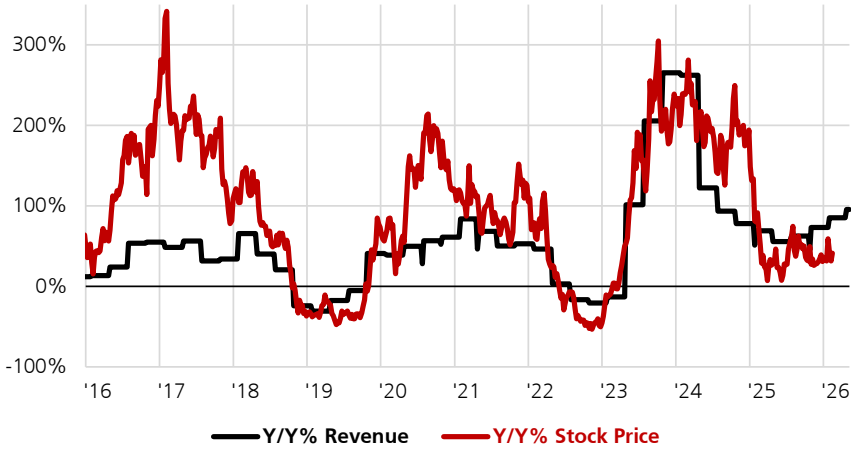

Even if we assume that the CPU commentary includes some system level aspect, these numbers are big enough to read negatively for other CPU market participants based largely on NVDA's ability to have this supply already procured. We would read this as negative for ARM's own aspirations in particular, which has far less established wafer and HBM agreements.

Valuation: PT $280 (prior $275)

Our PT walks up from $275 to $280, based on an 18x P/E multiple (based on broad semis peer group, down from prior 19x) applied to C2027E EPS of $15.37 (previously at $14.35). Based on the average C2027/C2028 EPS of $16.80 our PT suggests a ~16.5x multiple. See Valuation for details.

*"GPUs" include adjustment for superchips. For example, GB200/300 and VR200/300 all have 2 GPUs and 1 CPU and counted as 2 GPUs each in our GPU count. "Vera CPUs" number includes both Vera CPUs in superchips and stand alone. "Units (chip, superchip)" count total units sold, representing multi-GPU superchips as 1 unit.

Company Description

NVIDIA Corp. designs and manufactures graphics processing units, add-in boards, and related low-level software. Its Graphics Processing Unit segment includes GeForce for high-end video games and professional graphics workstations; Quadro for designers; DGX and Tesla Accelerator cards for data center and AI scientists; and GRID for cloud-based visual computing users. The Tegra Processors segment provides processors that enable embedded computer vision applications in automotive video surveillance end markets, as well as delivering multimedia experiences on mobile gaming platforms, while consuming minimal power.

Valuation Method and Risk Statement

NVDA: Our price target is based on applying a P/E multiple. NVIDIA company-specific risks include: 1) competition from AMD in graphics processors (GPUs) and professional visualization products, which historically have driven the bulk of the company's gross profit, 2) intense competition in ARM-based applications processors, where rivals seek to leapfrog NVIDIA's early lead in dual-core technology, 3) emerging competition from Intel with its many-integrated core (MIC) processor family vs. the company's professional GPU computing products, where Intel's approach could be more flexible and easier to develop software. In addition, NVIDIA faces the semiconductor sector risk where revenue trends have historically been linked to corporate profitability, which could be challenged for robust growth, as the economic recovery has been more subdued vs. prior deep downturns.

Investing in structured investments involves significant risks. For a detailed discussion of the risks involved in investing in any particular structured investment, you must read the relevant offering materials for that investment. Structured investments are unsecured obligations of a particular issuer with returns linked to the performance of an underlying asset. Depending on the terms of the investment, investors could lose all or a substantial portion of their investment based on the performance of the underlying asset. Investors could also lose their entire investment if the issuer becomes insolvent. UBS does not guarantee in any way the obligations or the financial condition of any issuer or the accuracy of any financial information provided by any issuer. Structured investments are not traditional investments and investing in a structured investment is not equivalent to investing directly in the underlying asset. Structured investments may have limited or no liquidity, and investors should be prepared to hold their investment to maturity. The return of structured investments may be limited by a maximum gain, participation rate or other feature. Structured investments may include call features and, if a structured investment is called early, investors would not earn any further return and may not be able to reinvest in similar investments with similar terms. Structured investments include costs and fees which are generally embedded in the price of the investment. The tax treatment of a structured investment may be complex and may differ from a direct investment in the underlying asset. UBS and its employees do not provide tax advice. Investors should consult their own tax advisor about their own tax situation before investing in any securities.

Important Information About Sustainable Investing Strategies: Sustainable investing strategies aim to consider and incorporate environmental, social and governance (ESG) factors into investment process and portfolio construction. Strategies across geographies approach ESG analysis and incorporate the findings in a variety of ways. Incorporating ESG factors or Sustainable Investing considerations may inhibit the portfolio manager's ability to participate in certain investment opportunities that otherwise would be consistent with its investment objective and other principal investment strategies. The returns on a portfolio incorporating ESG factors or Sustainable Investing considerations may be lower or higher than portfolios where ESG factors, exclusions, or other sustainability issues are not considered by the portfolio manager, and the investment opportunities available to such portfolios may differ.
