A hawkish Fed could weigh on ASEAN equities

Following the FOMC's 25bp rate hike, markets continue to price a higher-for-longer rate path, with the latest dot plot pointing to another rate hike in 2026. UBS expects the next rate hike in December. During past Fed tightening cycles, ASEAN markets have typically seen their deepest correction in the first three months following the initial hike, declining by an average of 7.4% before gradually recovering over the subsequent six months. With policy tightening still underway and external balances deteriorating across parts of ASEAN, the backdrop for equities is becoming more challenging despite attractive valuations across the broader market, with 57% of MSCI ASEAN stocks still trading below historical averages.

The impact of bond yields has been uneven

The relationship between equity returns and yields has varied across cycles, but rising yields have generally become a headwind for ASEAN equities over the last five years. Returns have been more sensitive to changes in US real yields than nominal yields, reflecting the impact of tighter financial conditions and a stronger US dollar weighing on risk appetite. Historically, a 100bp increase in US yields has resulted in a 3-4% decline in ASEAN returns. The Philippines and Vietnam appear most sensitive to US yields, while Indonesia is more exposed to moves in local bond yields.

Can valuations still absorb higher rates?

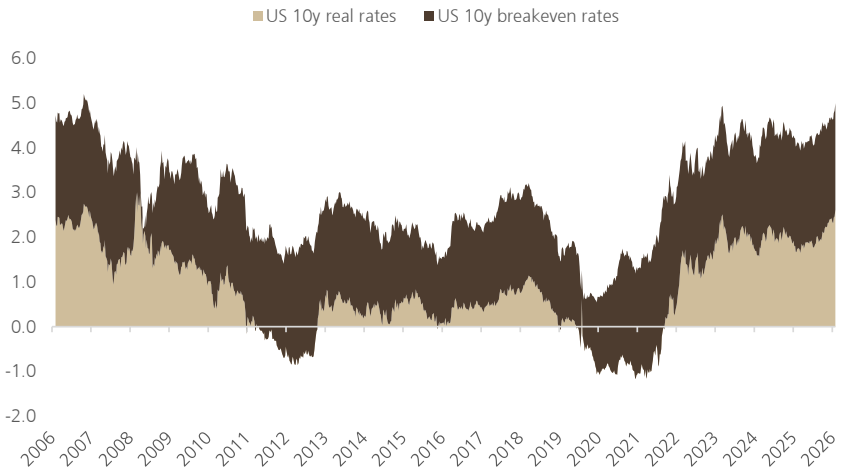

Higher bond yields have compressed equity risk premiums across the region, with spreads between earnings yields and local bond yields now at around 1-2SD below historical averages. This suggests valuation support has become less compelling and markets are increasingly sensitive to further increases in rates. On aggregate, Singapore screens as relatively expensive, while Indonesia is the only ASEAN market that continues to offer valuation buffer relative to bonds. At the same time, external balances in Thailand, Indonesia and the Philippines are deteriorating, while ASEAN corporates are among the most leveraged in the region, particularly in the Philippines and Vietnam. This leaves ASEAN relatively exposed should funding conditions tighten further. We expect further tightening in Indonesia, Singapore, Philippines and Malaysia.

Our stock sensitivity screens

We run three screens across our ASEAN stock coverage to identify potential opportunities and risks from higher rates. 1) Figure 13 highlights stocks that have benefitted when US yields rise. These are concentrated in financials across Singapore, Thailand and Indonesia, as well as energy and materials in Indonesia and Thailand. Among the Buy-rated stocks are BCA, Kasikornbank, Amman Minerals and PTT. 2) Figure 14 and Figure 15 show stocks that are negatively exposed when US yields rise. This is broad-based across ASEAN, particularly within real estate and macro-sensitive conglomerates. At the stock level, Sea Ltd, Thai Airways and Keppel DC REIT are among the more negatively exposed. 3) Figure 16 screens for balance sheet risk. True, AIS, Sembcorp and ICTSI rank among the highly geared stocks in the region.

Source: Datastream, UBS

The FOMC raised rates by 25bps to a target range of 3.75-4.00%, with the latest dot plot pointing to an additional rate hike in 2026. This is consistent with UBS expectations of a further 25bps increase in December. US Treasury yields have risen sharply, with the 10y nominal yield hitting close to 20y highs, driven by higher real and breakeven rates.

Over the past month, the sell-off in bond markets has been broad-based across EM and APAC, although the increase in yields has been more pronounced in the US. This likely reflects a combination of stronger US growth, renewed inflation concerns and a more hawkish Fed.

Looking across past Fed tightening cycles, ASEAN markets have seen the deepest correction in the first three months following the initial hike, falling by 7.4% on average before recovering over the subsequent six months. Historically, the Philippines and Vietnam have struggled more, while Singapore and Malaysia have been relatively more defensive.

ASEAN equities have had a complex relationship with bonds. Correlations between equity returns and changes in yields have swung around over the years.

Source: MSCI, Datastream, UBS

Markets have been more sensitive to moves in US real yields than nominal yields, as higher real rates tend to tighten global financial conditions, strengthen the US dollar and reduce the relative attractiveness of EM assets. Over the last 20 years, rising nominal yields have been slightly positive for equities, while rising real yields have been negative.

Source: MSCI, Datastream, UBS. Note: (*) statistically significant relationship at 5% p-value level.

But over the last five years, the relationship between equities and yields have turned negative, with Vietnam and the Philippines the most sensitive to US yields. Vietnam's sensitivity has risen notably in recent years, which may be due to its greater exposure to rate-sensitive sectors and its high dependence on external demand. Meanwhile, the Philippines remains the most sensitive due to its exposure to external financing.

Source: MSCI, Datastream, UBS. Note: (*) statistically significant relationship at 5% p-value level.

While Indonesia is the least sensitive ASEAN market to changes in US yields, it is the most sensitive to movements in its respective local bond yields, reflecting the greater influence of domestic liquidity and interest rate conditions on domestic equities.

Following the FOMC's hawkish hike, we continue to expect BNM to deliver a pre-emptive hike in November, while the BoT is likely to remain on hold through year-end. BSP has raised its policy rate by 75bp so far this year, and we now expect an additional hike in October. In Singapore, we expect MAS to tighten policy in October, with average 1m SORA rising towards 1.75% by year-end. BI has already hiked rates by a cumulative 100bp this year, and we see another hike potentially in September, ahead of our October expectation.

Source: IBES, MSCI, Datastream, UBS. Note: calculated on the basis of index-weighted methodology

Rising bond yields have compressed equity risk premiums across most of the region. With spreads between earnings yield and local bond yields at 1-2SD below historical averages, valuations are becoming increasingly sensitive to further increases in rates. Within ASEAN, Singapore looks expensive, while Indonesia still provides valuation buffer relative to bonds.

Thailand, Indonesia and the Philippines are potential weak links within the region, with external balances deteriorating to levels not seen since 2022. With rising US real yields and a stronger dollar, these economies may face greater pressure through the currency and capital flows, particularly given softer domestic growth dynamics. Singapore and Malaysia are more resilient, given its external balance surplus.

Source: IBES, MSCI, Datastream, UBS. Note: calculated on the basis of index-weighted methodology

ASEAN corporates are among the most leveraged across the region, with the Philippines screening as highly geared driven by index-heavyweight ICTSI. Vietnam and Indonesia saw notable increases, while the rest of ASEAN has been generally stable over the last three years.

Valuation Method and Risk Statement

Equity investing has many uncertainties; but generally; economic and policy surprises pose the most consistent and constant risks. Economic growth can be volatile; leading to earnings uncertainty. Inflation volatility can likewise lead to interest rate uncertainty. The direction and level of policy rates have a substantial impact on equity valuations. Political events can also have a significant impact; both on growth and risk premiums.
Country specific risks include slowing economic growth; rising inflation; increasing unemployment; adverse political developments leading to instability; trade war leading to trade restrictions; adverse weather and natural disasters that may impact consumption such as flooding.
Company specific risks include competition; regulation risk; high operating cost; currency depreciation; declining purchasing power; excessive credit growth; NPL issues; provision risk; recapitalization risk; availability of financing for buyers; changes in consumer preferences; e-commerce disruption; market share loss; and ease of logistics.
